Laughing Disease Cured!

On Thursday morning, an emergency laughing disease vaccine was approved. Surprisingly, this cure has 99.98% effectiveness, probably due to its potent mixture of liquid NHD, homework, depression, and grief. The vaccine has been labeled as 'sadness in a syringe'. The editors highly suggest you receive the vaccine.

Should non-challenge kids get the newsletter? If so, who?

In the most recent newsletter, a thank-you page at the bottom featured non-challenge kids, and multiple quotes from non-challenge kids were also showcased. Although one of them had previously been in challenge and had received the letter multiple times before, the topic is still under debate, and is extremely controversial. Let's take a look at both sides; the first non-challenge kid on the list is Audrey Long, she has received almost all of the newsletters due to her previous challenge membership and close relationship to Conner Day. So the editors believe we can say, with caution, that Audrey Long is fine getting the newsletter. But then, why was there such an uprising when Owen King was added? To clarify, on the 13th of February (yes, Friday the thirteenth) in Beltran's class, there was a minor uprising due to the addition of Owen King to the newsletter. While Audrey Long's inclusion seems justified due to her past involvement, the case of Owen King raises questions about how we define eligibility for the newsletter. So, the editors propose a survey on who should be eligible for the newsletter. To take the survey, go to this link. In conclusion, things are happening. Non-challenge kids are being added to something some would say should be challenge-exclusive, so will this be a turning point in the newsletter, or will this divide us apart?

Elmo hosts Russian Roulette!

Losers lose one of the following: their kneecaps, their souls to some computer, all of their villi and avioli, or are shipped off to the other Maryland. We're looking for people to sign up and try to win the grand prize of a sticker and a lifetime supply of nacho bell's special doritos edition™ amino burgers!

The sign-up fee is one kidney, but it doesn't matter whose. We hope to see you playing alongside an old lady offering bed and breakfast, some green crayon with a weird look in its singular eye, and [REDACTED].

Also, remember to celebrate the last episode's winner, Jeremy, and give him a pat on the back for losing his entire family and friends if you see him around. Maybe ask him how he's enjoying his ten-thousand illegally broken-in-half pennies he won last Saturday.

Remember to participate in KIC'EM week!

As opposed to Kindness Is Contagious, coming up next week is Kerosine Isn't Combustible Excessively, Maybe... Where we test just that by heating Kerosine to 213 degrees and covering the school in it.

KIC'EM week will spread the spirit of experimentation to all the land. If conditions are ideal, maybe kerosene is only slightly flammable but not explosive, so we'll get to participate in the making of a light show!

Well, some will do that, while others who hypothesize that it actually is highly explosive will protest or cower in fear, but there's nothing to worry about! It probably won't make debris rain all over Grand Junction and incinerate all those involved!

...Right?

Strange Maps Found

Several strange maps were found in social studies, showing attack plans on multiple parts of America, varying between maps. We're sending warnings to those in 1845 Texas and either Maryland.

Peculiarly enough, some of these maps seem... Unfinished? Almost like they were made with a short due date but █████ both didn't do his homework and spent too much time playing The Binding of Isaac instead of helping the government destroy itself or something.

Well, we have nothing to do with them, so feel free to look at our attack maps we found on the floor. Oh wait, it's not ours, it's all of ours, I keep forgetting this is challenge and how our government works here.

Marek 'Moist Czech' Nelb, Dies of drowning in his own sweat.

Marek, who had been suffering from progressive Moist Czech disease (which causes one's hands to sweat profusely, and perpetually), suffered a massive, fatal moistness attack on Wednesday morning, drowning in his own sweat. He was found by the authorities in his house at approximately 9:43 AM. Some suspect foul play, although there is not yet any evidence pointing to that conclusion. Mourn his loss with us on National Moist Czech day (February 30).

Meme of the Week

If it's not supposed to work, it shouldn't fit.

Upcoming

- NHD showcase tomorrow. Good luck and try not to die. If you do, that will be sad.
- Orchestra Solo and Ensemble tonight (For challenge students). Fun fact: If you're not superior, you have any score but superior.
